GREAT EVENTS from LITTLE CAUSES; being a Select Collection of Narratives of the Revolutions that have happened from the beginning of time to the present period. Drawn from the writings of the best Historians, ancient and modern; and perused by the author with the utmost attention. Wherein are shewn the Springs which set the world in Motion, and the Causes (tho seemingly inconsiderable) from whence the most extraordinary incidents have been produced. This work is accurately taken from large tracts in different languages; brought into one portable volume, related in a pleasing manner, and considered in a new light. Translated from the Paris edition of the celebrated Monsieur A. RICHER, as published in 1767. Price sewed in blue paper 2s. 2l. bound and lettered a British half crown.

INSTITUTES or PRINCIPLES of HEALTH, shewing from Reason and Experience, that Prevention is the best Medicine, and in every man's power, without the assistance or advice of a physician.

Here follows a short view of the work.

The Author accuses himself of having formerly slighted these principles, by which omission he forfeited his Health. He acknowledges the inexpressible good he afterwards received by observing them. He hath with great application read the most eminent medical authors, and observes that they contradict one another in essential points. Very eminent physicians have founded their practice on the preventive principles of diet and exercise. Short histories of great men who have preserved and lengthened their lives by preventives. The ancient Romans used the preventive practice of physic, before they were unmann'd by luxury. A short regimen of health, also a daily system concerning diet and exercise. Of Drink. Of Air. Of Bathing. Of Dress. Of the Passions. Sugar hurtful to the animal œconomy. Plain diet produces good blood and good complexion. The sublime of taste to be found in the plainest diet. Rich diet dulls the senses. The wines of France prejudicial prejudicial to health. The author always appeals to Reason, and hath laid down his precepts as near as he could to the test of Nature that supreme standard of truth.

(Price a British Shilling.)

A Course of Experiments and Improvements in AGRICULTURE; was much pleased to see the beautiful beginnings of a promising Edifice, arising from Experiments, on the real Effects in Nature; and doubted not to see the experimental part of Agriculture, open itself by degrees and flourish on towards perfection, keeping company with Natural Philosophy, in making enquiry into the material world by actual experiments. He thought it surprising that Gentlemen are so much wanting to themselves as not to lay hold of every opportunity of improvements in AGRICULTURE. The Author threw in his mite towards perfecting this truly useful and agreeable part of knowledge and has spared no pains to speak intelligibly of what he has delivered concerning the growth of all useful vegetables &c. Corn in particular.

PARDON's Accomplished Schoolmaster. This useful Book having been for some time past out of print, several little Booksellers as injudiciously as injuriously taking the advantage of its Scarcity, published Things called Spelling Books, and English Grammars, with new Titles and old matter, tho most material Parts of them being pilfered from the above Book, and thrown at Random throughout their Pieces. A new edition therefore of the Genuine Work is at this time absolutely necessary.

To this edition is added a Catalogue of more than sixscore Words, which Englishmen always pronounce pronounce improperly; and which impropriety some people even in Ireland servilely imitate, by which capital Error the very Sense of Words is confounded, and the young Learner rendered incapable to write correct English.

Here follow a few of the Words above hinted at; the Impropriety in the Pronunciation whereof, produces Words, each of which is of two Meanings, viz.

Flea like Flee.	❖	Sea like See.
Heal like Heel.	❖	Suit like Soot.
Meat like Meet.	❖	Sit like Set.
Peace like Piece.	❖	Weak like Week.
